★ Reading aloud to children

The stories read aloud to children are their introduction to the world of books. Reading to young children shows them how to use books: reading from left to right and top to bottom, turning pages, and recognizing illustrations and words.

Reading aloud also increases exposure to language, vocabulary, and ideas, which builds background knowledge and comprehension.

★ How to approach wordless picture books

Wordless picture books are ideal for developing creative and linear thinking.

- Begin by reviewing the title and cover. What do they tell you about the story?
- Encourage the child to tell the story through the illustrations and make predictions.
- Finally, read it again and support the child's own version of the story.

★ Motivating children to read

Explore the child's interests. With various themes, genres, subjects, and writing styles, the RRL has something for everyone.

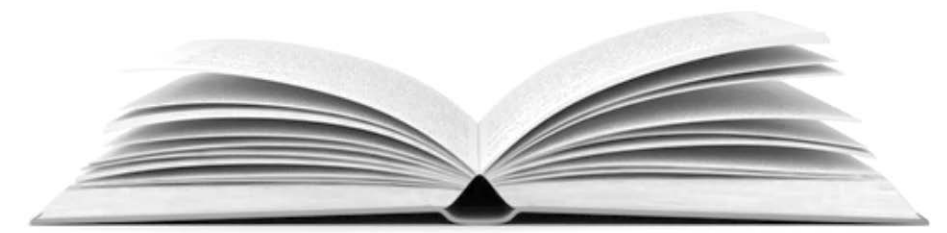

Make reading interactive by discussing the story. Talk about the characters, setting, and events. Use imagination and creativity to involve the child in the story. Ask questions that make them feel a part of it.

- If you could be friends with anyone in the book, who would it be? Why (character's name)?
- How would you feel if (specific story event) happened to you?
- Did you like the story's ending? How would you change it?

★ Keep going!

Don't stop reading to the child just because they can read independently. Try reading longer books one chapter at a time to introduce advanced vocabulary, plotlines, and sentence structures. Continue to talk about and recommend books to them.

To help widen the child's exposure to different ideas and experiences, encourage them to read books from different genres or authors. At the same time, continue to encourage the child to read more of what they enjoy. Above all, reading should be positive, engaging, and fun!
